

GUIDE TO BLACK- LINE MASTERS

All blackline masters (bound separately) are to be photocopied.

Worksheets: Blackline Masters 1–61

The corner containing the worksheet number should be cut off the master before the master is copied to eliminate any possible perceptual confusion for the children.

The smiling face at the top of some of the worksheets help the children position the page correctly. When the face is facing at the child the page is right side up.

The chart on pages 387–396 is a guide for teachers to refer to as they prepare Worksheets 1–61. The instructions explain any special steps that are necessary. The text references refer to each page in the text where that worksheet may be used.

Observation Sheets: Black- line Masters I–IX

The Observation Sheets are informal record-keeping devices used to observe children's progress during certain key lessons. These pages should be duplicated and then each copy used to record observations of about six children at a time. By focusing attention on a small group of children the teacher is able to observe many details of individual children's progress which otherwise may be overlooked.

The names of the children being observed are written on the slanted lines at the top of the Observation Sheets. Once the observation is made, the information may be saved on these sheets, transferred to individual children's records, or used for reference in recording progress on the Assessment of Skills.
