

LYMPHATIC AND IMMUNE SYSTEM STUDY GUIDE

THE BLOOD (Chapter 18.4, 18.6)

1. Classify leukocytes according to their lineage and their primary functions:

- Granular leukocytes: neutrophils, eosinophils, basophils
- Agranular leukocytes: monocytes (macrophages), lymphocytes (natural killer cells, B cells, T cells)

2. Describe the antigens (on RBCs) and antibodies (on plasma) associated with the different ABO blood types.

3. Identify which blood groups may be safely transfused into patients with different ABO types

4. Discuss the consequences of a transfusion reaction.

Blood transfusions are generally considered safe, but there is some risk of complications. Mild complications and rarely severe ones can occur during the transfusion or several days or more after. More common reactions include allergic reactions, which might cause hives and itching, and fever.

5. Contrast Rh blood groups with ABO blood groups.

Two of the antigens found on the surface of red blood cells are called antigen A and antigen B. The ABO group system for blood typing is based on which of these antigens you have on your red blood cells. You inherit the particular combination of blood group antigens you have from your parents.

- Blood type A: your red blood cells have antigen A only.
- Blood type B: your red blood cells have antigen B only.
- Blood type AB: your red blood cells have both A and B antigens.
- Blood type O: you have neither A nor B antigens on your red blood cells.

In your plasma (the liquid component of your blood), you will have antibodies against whichever antigens you don't have on your own red blood cells i.e. antigens that are foreign. These antibodies are present without you having contact with the "foreign" blood type. How this occurs is not clear yet.

- If you are blood group A, you will have antibodies to antigen B.
- If you are blood group B, you will have antibodies to antigen A.
- If you are blood type AB, you will not have antibodies to either A or B.
- If you are blood type O, you will have antibodies to both A and B.

The other blood typing system commonly used is the Rhesus system, also called Rh system, named after the Rhesus monkey in which it was first discovered. In this system, if you have an antigen called the RhD antigen on the surface of your red blood cells, you are said to be Rhesus positive (Rh+). If you don't, you are said to be Rhesus negative (Rh-). In Australia, about 83% of people are Rh positive.

Combining your ABO blood group with whether you are Rh+ or Rh- means your blood can be classified as one of 8 possible types:

- O positive (O+)
- O negative (O-)
- A positive (A+)
- A negative (A-)
- B positive (B+)
- B negative (B-)
