

Chapter 5: developing through the lifespan

In conception 300 million + neurons race to fertilize a single egg. Once the single sperm wins, the 23 chromosomes of the sperm pair with the 23 chromosomes of the egg

Mom → always gives u X

Dad → gives u X or Y

If dad gives X → female

If dad gives Y → male

Fertilized egg starts dividing into stem cells. Later, those cells will differentiate into special functions (neurons, heart, liver, etc.)

Fertilized egg that's less than two weeks old is called a zygote

Half of all zygotes don't survive

Embryo— fertilized egg that 2–8 weeks

Organs form + function

Fetus— 8 weeks to birth

Learning can occur during fetal development (e.g. preference for mom's voice)

Teratogens— harmful elements that pass placental barrier harming developing fetus

Nicotine and heroin users will pass those chemicals onto child

Alcohol → fetal alcohol syndrome (FAS)

1 in 750 children have FAS

FAS causes facial abnormality, leading cause of intellectual disability

In the womb, neurons form at 250,000/minute but there are few synaptic connections, creating infantile amnesia in the first 3 years. Memory is supported by neural networks
