

Downing A Duck

This story was related by prisoners who know and understand the set-up process. They were inmates who, at one time or another, had been implicated as conspirators in several illegal contraband cases involving prison staff members. They would not discuss their own individual techniques of modifying prison personnel behavior, but they did relate events of the set-up process implemented by one of their cohorts, citing the procedural as typical. The authors cannot attest to the validity of their statements; however, the individual being discussed does indicate consistency between his behavior in the situation and expected manipulative pattern.

The prison jargon term "duck:" refers to an institution employee who can be manipulated or easily fooled.

Cracking the Shell Takes Time and Effort

You have to go about developing a duck in a manner that creates very little suspicion. A man would be a fool to just walk up to a joint cop and ask him to bring in "grass," booze or money. You have to go slow, which takes time and effort. The dudes who get caught are the ones who get over-anxious and move too fast. The first thing you gotta do is watch. You know, things like the way a person acts, walks, stands, sits, or dresses can tell you a hell of a lot about them. Things they laugh or smile at; what makes them sad or angry; their likes and dislikes; this is all important information if you really want to develop a duck. You gotta start small if you want to get a person to a point where they'll do just about anything you say. The last duck I developed was natural. Naive, shy, friendly as hell, a do-gooder who could be made to believe anything. You see, prisons don't know how to warn their people. They gotta say, "Be friendly, be nice," but they don't know how to tell them when they're going overboard. So I'm gonna tell this story like he was my duck. At any rate I started my duck with nothing more than getting him to give me pencils and paper in excess of what he was supposed to give. Here's how I developed him.

Developing the Duck

I watched this cop for a long time. He had all the traits. He was uneasy around his boss, pushed the nice guy bit so strong on us he overlooked violation of some small unit rules in other words, he didn't take care of business. He couldn't put across his orders with any kind of firmness, and the cons were givin' him a rough row to hoe. When you find a guy like this, you can pretty well figure you got a duck—but you can be too hasty, you gotta be sure. I sent some friends of mine to get him involved in philosophical discussion to find out where his head was and to push him a little to see how far he'd let things go. They talked about how bad other cops treated them and how they hoped he didn't become like all other cops. He agreed, and told them about things he'd seen the other "bulls" do that supported their reason for disliking cops. While the talk was going on, some of the guys broke rules like stepping inside another con's cell, putting marks on the wall, suggesting playing poker—all minor rule violations. The officer said nothing. Each time he started to leave and tell some guy to knock it off they'd praise the hell out of him and he'd get back into the conversation. Me, I just watched. The guy was very easily distracted and we build on the nice guy image. He didn't look like a cop—sloppy dresser, half done jobs, and he'd come unglued if someone said he did a poor job, or if
