An earthquake happens when rocks under the Earth's surface suddenly move. This causes the ground to shake.

If an earthquake happens under the ocean, it can cause huge waves called tsunamis.

Most earthquakes happen near cracks in the Earth's surface called fault lines.

Earthquakes can cause buildings, bridges and roads to crack or fall down if they're not built to withstand shaking.

Earthquakes are measured using a tool called a seismometer. The size or strength is measured on the Richter scale.

The largest earthquake happened in Chile in 1960. It was so powerful that it even caused tsunamis!

Scientists have found that other planets, like Mars, have quakes too. They are called marsquakes!
