Lab #: _____ - Plate Boundaries and Patterns of Activity

Introduction: The Earth's crust is divided into several "plates". Some plates consist of mainly ocean crust, some are mostly continental crust, and some plates are made up of both ocean and continental crust. The plates, which together make up Earth's lithosphere, "float" on top of the mantle and move due to convection cells in the mantle. Movement of these plates causes earthquakes, volcanoes, and the building of mountain ranges. In this lab you will investigate patterns of earthquakes, volcanoes, and mountain ranges and determine the type of motion that takes place between earth's plates.
