16. Analyzing Economic and Demographic Effects: How has the globalization of trade and investment, along with the rise of multinational corporations, influenced the economic development of the Global South?

Agribusiness revolution:	This agribusiness revolution has changed the production of food and farming, which changed the population's food and hence people's behavior. Agriculture is the main job and source of income.
Increased industrial resources:	Increased resources with an increase in technology, such as the use of fertilizers and pesticides, have increased agricultural productivity and output, leading to a surplus of food.
Political stability:	More political stability allows capital to flow and invest, which leads to infrastructure building, trade liberalization, and increasing foreign investments.
Private oil production:	Private firms are allowed to supply oil and other commodities and services, leading to increased oil production, growth, and capital. Private firms and the government invest in private firms.
Technological advances in telecommunications:	The advances improved the quality of service and the speed it could be produced.
Globalization:	The globalization leads to all the risks and benefits of economic and technological globalization.
Migration of workers:	More people moved from the Global South and worked in the Global North.
Political issues:	The political issues created uncertainty of investors of their jobs, the political issues created conflict and stress.
