On April 5, 2007, I conducted an interview with Jeannette Lyon, a former colleague of a friend. Ms. Lyon was a part-time real estate instructor in addition to her job as an agent, at an institution of higher learning. I was interested in interviewing her because of her age and her career choice. Currently, Ms. Lyon is taking leave from teaching to raise her new baby, but she had a plethora of information and insight into the job of college instructor. She plans on returning to collegiate learning after elevating her education through online classes while she stays at home and raises her baby. Ms. Lyon is thirty three years old with one child. She looks very young and is very professional and polite. I was intrigued that someone so young and good looking was a college instructor. She defies many stereotypes. Due to our distance, we conducted a conference style interview with interactive web cam and voice. The quality was good and there was relatively little distraction. The interview was very professional. I initiated the interview with an email, to which Ms. Lyon responded. She was very cordial and happy to provide me with the information that I needed. I began the interview by telling her hello and thanking her for doing this. I let her know that I just had a few questions for her, but the interview could take a half of an hour, and I knew that she had a child at home, so if for any reason we needed to stop and resume later, we could do that as well. She assured me that her husband was tending the daughter and that I had her full attention. I asked Ms. Lyon the following questions: 1. What does your job entail? In brief, she responded that there is a lot of prep work, especially for a first time course or new book. It involves looking through the text, finding what is helpful, planning when to use that, and looking for other resources to aid in the learning process. That's before the class even starts. Handouts and schedules need to be made, textbooks need to be ordered, online materials need to be in order. When classes begin, there is a period of instability as students catch on to teaching style, and drop or add the class. Many are not prepared – they come with no textbooks or no knowledge of the computer, which being a real estate agent requires that. Throughout the quarter, the schedule must be revisited and adjusted as needed. Grading essays is very time consuming and even though there is a rubric, it is highly subjective. At the end of the quarter, there are more grading and evaluating portfolios and submitting final grades. She referred to end of quarter grading like this: "It is hell." 2. What are the educational requirements for the job? Some institutions will hire bachelor degree holders, but for the most part, a Master's degree is needed or a PhD is preferred. For some programs of study, however, little or no education is needed; job experience is what is...
