

Dialectical Journals

Quote	Analysis
"Turned, the babies at once fell silent, then began to crawl towards those clusters of sleek colours, those shapes so gay and brilliant on the white pages. As they approached, the sun came out of a momentary eclipse behind a cloud. The roses flamed up as though with a sudden passion from within; a new and profound significance seemed to suffuse the shining pages of the books. From the ranks of the crawling babies came little squeals of excitement, gurgles and twitterings of pleasure" (Huxley 20).	During this tour of the Hatchery in the civilized world, the Director explains how the babies are conditioned. Huxley uses metaphors like "the sun came out of a momentary eclipse" and the "roses flamed up as though with a sudden passion from within" to explain how serious and intense the conditioning process is for little ones. The process must be this way to be effective so much later in life. Huxley has this entire world thought out and used the slightest metaphor to bring out the severity of it. Secondly, Huxley uses interesting word choice in the end of the quote. The babies went back to "gurgles and twitterings of pleasure," suggesting that they went back to being not bothered at all. Huxley's choice of words brings out the harshness of the conditioning and the innocence that the babies feel.
"What is there more important to say? And how can one be violent about the sort of things one's expected to write about? Words can be like X-rays, if you use them properly – they'll go through anything. You read and you're pierced" (Huxley 70).	The imagery that Huxley uses in this passage is profound. He uses a metaphor to explain the effect of words in the World State. In context, the D.H.C. is speaking about the hypnopaedia that is happening in the Hatchery. He explained that the words that children hear at a young age "pierce" through them and are like "X-rays," they override any potential individual thoughts that the children might have had in the future.
"She looked at Bernard with an expression of rapture, but of rapture in which there was no trace of agitation or excitement – for to be excited is still to be unsatisfied" (Huxley 85).	Huxley's use of an analogy here illustrates the incompleteness of the civilians' lives in the World State. The way that they are conditioned to live is never quite fulfilling, so they go out and continue to be social and sexual beings in hopes that their practices will someday make them feel complete. The people in the city are always excited by the social gatherings and the hook-ups, but oftentimes they are left unsatisfied.
