1. Complexity: The organization's structure is often more of an emergent response than the result of a design. This often happens as policy and strategy is subject to constant modification, with the structure being in flux to support it.
2. Flexibility: A structure that allows rapid response to changes in the business environment is essential. It is often difficult to build in, but it is a key to long-term success. This is often achieved through a combination of formal and informal communication channels.
3. Cost: A structure that is too complex or inefficient can be a major drain on the organization's resources. The costs of a structure should be weighed against the benefits it provides. This is often a balancing act between the costs of a structure and the benefits it provides.
4. Communication: A structure that facilitates communication is essential for the success of an organization. This is often achieved through a combination of formal and informal communication channels.
5. Integration: A structure that integrates the various functions of an organization is essential for the success of an organization. This is often achieved through a combination of formal and informal communication channels.
6. Control: A structure that provides a means of control is essential for the success of an organization. This is often achieved through a combination of formal and informal communication channels.
7. Adaptability: A structure that allows the organization to adapt to changes in the business environment is essential for the success of an organization. This is often achieved through a combination of formal and informal communication channels.
8. Efficiency: A structure that is efficient in the way it operates is essential for the success of an organization. This is often achieved through a combination of formal and informal communication channels.
9. Effectiveness: A structure that is effective in the way it achieves its goals is essential for the success of an organization. This is often achieved through a combination of formal and informal communication channels.
