

Chewing is the first stage of the digestive system. The food goes into your mouth. When you chew your food, the food particles break down into small pieces that are easier to swallow. The saliva has a lot of enzymes that mix with food particles and break down the food particles more. This is called oral salivary digestion.

After you are done chewing, the tongue helps you to push the food down to your stomach. The food then travels through a long pipe called the esophagus, where the food particles are pushed down with swallowing through the esophagus. They arrive at the stomach. It is the esophagus is a part called peristalsis and it helps move your food particles to your stomach. There is also another part called swallowing and helps the food to stay in the esophagus and not go down into the stomach.

The stomach releases lots of acids and enzymes to break down the food particles even more so our body can absorb it. An enzyme called pepsin present in the stomach helps break down the proteins.

I am being dissolved by enzymes that break down food into small pieces. It comes from saliva. This is also where the esophagus is located and helps to keep food from going into the windpipe.

I am going to the stomach where I will stay for 4 hours.

There are lots of enzymes that break down the food.

When the food reaches the large intestine, lots of acids are produced from the liver and pancreas to help break down the particles. The liver produces bile which helps in breaking down fats and the pancreas produces other enzymes to help break down the other food particles. After that, the particles are transferred to your body through blood. This is called fecal digestion.

The food that is not absorbed by the small intestine will arrive at the large intestine and when the food travels through it the large intestine will absorb the water and other remaining particles and sends it out of your body known as excretion. The intestine is also where microbes are located and help increase the surface area of intestine so that the nutrients can pass through.

Now I am at the final stage of the digestion. The large intestine.
