Charles Brockden Brown, 2004-06 The ensuing day was spent partly in sleep and partly in languor and disquietude I incessantly ruminated on the incidents of the last night The scheme that I had formed was defeated Was it likely that this unknown person would repeat his midnight visits to the Elm If he did and could again be discovered should I resolve to undertake a new pursuit which might terminate abortively or in some signal disaster But what proof had I that the same route would be taken and that he would again enter himself alive in the same spot Edgar Huntly Charles Brockden Brown, 1857

Salyer, 2020-08-03 Brokering Culture in Britain's Empire and the Historical Novel examines the relationship between the historical sensibilities of nineteenth century British and American romancers and the conceptual frameworks that eighteenth century imperial interlocutors used to imagine and critique their own experiences of Britain's diffused tenuous and often accidental authority Salyer argues that this cultural experience more than what Lukács had in mind when he wrote of a mass historical consciousness after Napoleon gave rise to the Romantic historiographical approach of writers such as Walter Scott James Fenimore Cooper Charles Brockden Brown and Frederick Marryat This book traces the conversion of the eighteenth century imperial speaker into the nineteenth century romance hero through a number of proto novelistic responses to the problem of Imperial history including Edmund Burke in the Annual Register and the celebrated court case of James Annesley among others The author argues that popular Romantic novels such as Scott's

Waverley and Cooper's The Pioneers convert the problem of narrating the political geographies of eighteenth century Empire into a discourse of history placing the historical realities of negotiating Imperial authority at the heart of a nineteenth century project that fictionalized the possibilities and limits of political historical agency in the modern nation state
