Core Curriculum for Specialist Training

1. GENERAL REMARKS

1.1 Description of the discipline

Rheumatology is a specialty of medicine concerned with the diagnosis and management of diseases and of painful and functional disorders of the musculo-skeletal apparatus, that is, of the locomotor and connective tissue systems as well as of the adjoining soft tissues. It includes inflammatory diseases of the musculo-skeletal system, of the connective tissue and of the vessels; degenerative diseases of the joints and spine; metabolic disorders which manifest in the locomotor apparatus; soft tissue disorders and diseases of the internal organs and of the nervous system, insofar as these relate to the above-mentioned diseases (as listed in: "Classification of Diseases of the Locomotor Apparatus", Compendia Rheumatologica Volume 4, EULAR Publishers, Basel, 1979).

Therefore, Rheumatology includes interdisciplinary knowledge in particular of internal medicine, orthopaedics, neurology and neurosurgery, physical medicine and rehabilitation etc.

The Rheumatologist should be familiar with the aetiology, pathogenesis and epidemiology of the diseases pertaining to this specialist field. Their activities should focus on the one hand on diagnostic procedures, utilising or having access to clinical, laboratory, imaging and various special techniques (ECG, , sonography, arthroscopy, endoscopy, electromyography, etc.) and on therapy and management, which in addition to pharmacological methods also include local injection techniques, physical therapy, orthopaedic measures, occupational therapy, ergonomics and psychosocial care.

The Rheumatologist should also be familiar with the prognosis, prophylaxis and socio-economic importance of the rheumatic diseases and also have experience in the indications for surgery of the locomotor apparatus.

1.2 Goals of the post-graduate training

Post-graduate training leading to recognition as a specialist in Rheumatology should furnish the candidate with knowledge and skills which enable him to be competent in the entire field of Rheumatology, which might include the following activities.

- running a specialist practice
- acting in a consultative capacity
- directing a programme of physical therapy with rehabilitation for the rheumatic diseases (in and out-patient) in a clinic, a hospital or in connection with a private practice
- actively participating in the prevention of rheumatic diseases and providing patient education.
