

CHAPTER 1:

INCLUSIVE EDUCATION AS AN INTERNATIONAL HUMAN RIGHT'S ISSUE

Inclusive education is a process of developing an education system that realises the education rights of every child: “Every learner matters and matters equally” (UNESCO, 2017). This module adopts a broad social justice and human rights-based approach and places you, the teacher, as a key change agent in developing an inclusive and equitable education system by becoming a teacher who teaches inclusively.

1.1 The Universal Declaration of Human Rights

A rights-based approach to education is closely tied to human rights principles, as defined in the international declarations that many countries, including South Africa, have signed or ratified. The “Universal Declaration of Human Rights” of 1948, drafted by representatives with different legal and cultural backgrounds from all regions of the world, was proclaimed by the United Nations General Assembly in Paris on 10 December 1948 (General Assembly resolution 217 A), as a common standard of achievements for all peoples and all nations. It sets out, for the first time, fundamental human rights to be universally protected. Education, as a fundamental human right, is enshrined in the “Universal Declaration of Human Rights” of 1948.

Over the last fifty years, the idea of human rights has developed from words on a page to become a global movement, driven by people from all walks of life and communities. Human rights policies in education aim to:

- Promote, respect and protect the universal right of all children to inclusive, quality education
- Recognise that every learner and teacher is free to explore, discover, develop and express their potential, with dignity, with equal opportunity and without discrimination
