Exhibit 1

Class Description

Mr. Jones teaches seventh-grade mathematics. Although most of his program consists of general education classes, one is designated as an Integrated Co-Teaching (ICT) class. His co-teacher for that class, Ms. Smith, is a certified special education teacher. Although this is the first year that the two teachers have worked together, they have developed three teaching strategies that they use most often. In the first model, the two teachers each teach segments of the lesson to the entire class, often offering a variety of strategies to solve specific mathematical problems or concepts. During parallel teaching, the two teachers teach the same concept but split the class into two groups, with each teacher being responsible for one of the groups. Lastly, during some lessons, one of the teachers is responsible to teach the lesson to the entire class while the other teacher rotates around the room assisting individual students.

The ICT class consists of 25 students. Seventeen of them are general education students and receive no special education services, while eight of the students have Individualized Education Programs (IEPs). Of the eight students, five are classified as having a learning disability, one is classified as other health impaired, one is classified as emotionally disturbed and one as hearing impaired.

Jill, one of the students classified as learning disabled, has strong receptive and expressive language skills. Her main deficit is in the area of visual motor integration, which manifests itself by Jill's inability to copy from the board, poor handwriting, trouble aligning numbers when completing math problems and inability to copy shapes and forms.

Tom is classified as other health impaired and has been medically diagnosed as having attention deficit/hyperactivity disorder (ADHD). He is on grade level in mathematics, however, he frequently leaves his seat without permission and has difficulty focusing on tasks for extended periods of time.

Sam is classified as emotionally disturbed. He is on grade level in most subjects, but does have difficulty getting along with within a group of peers. He is frequently able to work with one peer at a time, but, if he becomes frustrated, he will begin to argue and/or fight. He often does not complete assignments and/or homework.
