Early Intervention in Transition Kofi Marfo, 1991-12-30 The growing prominence of ecological and social systems perspectives in the child development and family studies fields is having a significant impact on the conceptualization and delivery of early intervention services The exclusive focus on the handicapped or developmentally delayed child is gradually giving way to a much broader focus on the family as a system The parent child relationship is increasingly becoming a major intervention target At the same time the need to fine tune intervention programs to respond to the unique needs of different etiological groups is being emphasized This book brings together the conceptual and empirical work of a number of scholars whose current research is at the leading edge of these shifts The volume consists of an introductory overview of transitions occurring in the early intervention field a six chapter section dealing with current themes and conceptualizations of early intervention and a four chapter section focusing on international perspectives that describes influences on and noticeable trends in early intervention programming and research in several countries This book by its nature has an international appeal but perhaps more significantly it affords American researchers a unique opportunity to learn about the field of intervention as practiced in other lands The volume is intended for researchers graduate and senior undergraduate students program developers and administrators in the early intervention field and other human service professionals
