The drive assemblies of the probe module and the bar module have a horizontal and vertical photoelectric switch, which are used for defining horizontal and vertical initial positions of the probe and bar. The horizontal and vertical step motors precisely control the horizontal and vertical movements of the probe and bar. The synchronous belts serve as the gearing.

The shaft and the spline pair must cooperate with each other precisely, so they should not be replaced separately.

3.2.1.2 Sample/reagent disk, reaction disk assemblies

The sample/reagent disk assembly consists of the sample/reagent disk and bearing support. The reaction disk assembly consists of the reaction disk and bearing support. The two bearing support are different in their upper connection block and their coders. The gaps of the coder define the positions where the disk should stop at. Each coder has two transducers for inducing the rotation and initial position of the disk.
