

screw and the pilot jet with a screwdriver. No advantage will be gained by altering the jet sizes from those recommended.

Air Cleaner.

The air cleaner is contained within the housing below the seat. At 1,000 mile intervals remove the two screws retaining the cover, which should then be taken off (Fig. 11). Prise out wire circlip (Q) thus releasing the perforated cover and filter element. Wash the element in petrol, and dry thoroughly before replacing.

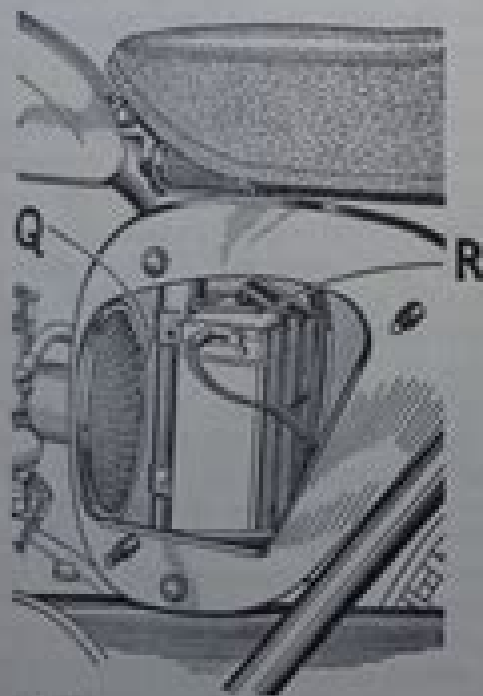

Fig. 11. Air cleaner and battery box.

TRANSMISSION

The unit construction of the engine and gearbox allows the use of fixed centres between clutch and engine sprockets, so that a pre-stretched endless chain of the duplex type is fitted. A spring link connection is not provided.

Excessive slackness in the primary chain is undesirable and an adjustable slipper type tensioner is provided on the lower run of the chain. The chain is in correct adjustment when there is approximately $\frac{1}{4}$ in. of free play at the midway position between the sprockets. It is most important that the chain should never be tight.

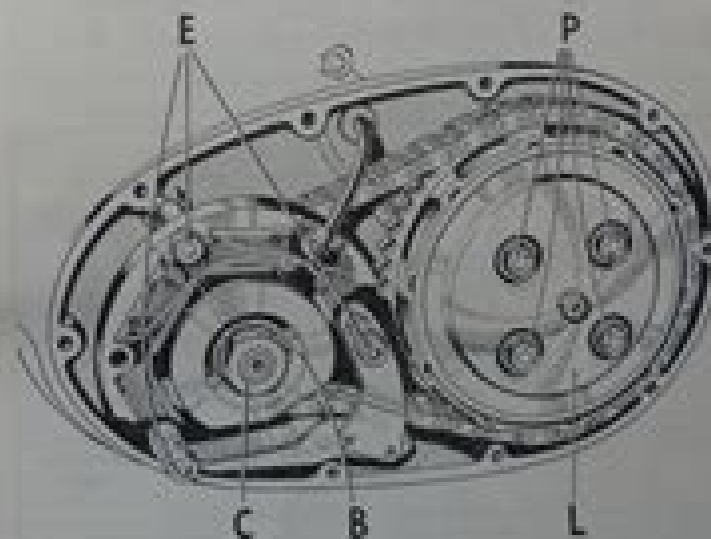

Fig. 12. Primary chain tensioner.

For adjustment of the chain, the cover must first be removed (see page 30). When the two lower generator retaining nuts (Fig. 12) are slackened, the position of the slipper can be altered to give the correct tension.

The only other maintenance required is to ensure a satisfactory oil level in the chaincase (see page 38).
