Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of elderly people. The study was conducted in a community center in a large city in Iran. The study population consisted of 30 elderly people (15 men and 15 women) aged 65 and older. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The control group received no intervention, and the intervention group received a 12-week training program. The training program consisted of aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. The physical fitness and HRQL were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week training program. The results showed that the intervention group had significantly higher physical fitness and HRQL than the control group at the end of the 12-week training program. The findings of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and HRQL of elderly people.

As demonstrated in our previous studies, the use of a structured, standardized, and validated instrument, such as the Parenting Stress Scale, is essential for the collection of reliable and valid data. The Parenting Stress Scale is a 10-item scale that measures the degree of stress experienced by parents in the role of parent. The scale is composed of three subscales: (a) Parenting Stress, (b) Parenting Satisfaction, and (c) Parenting Self-Efficacy. The Parenting Stress Scale has been found to be a reliable and valid measure of parenting stress in a sample of parents of children with intellectual disabilities (Gardner, 2000).
