Part I – Poisoned!

One evening during a recent trip to Indonesia, Dr. Marshall Westwood from the Montana Technical Institute sat down to a meal of pufferfish and rice. Within an hour of returning to his hotel room, Dr. Westwood felt numbness in his lips and tongue, which quickly spread to his face and neck. Before he could call the front desk, he began to feel pains in his stomach and throat, which produced feelings of nausea and eventually severe vomiting.

Fearing that he had eaten some “bad fish” for dinner, Dr. Westwood called a local hospital to describe his condition. The numbness in his lips and face made it almost impossible for him to communicate, but the hospital staff managed to at least understand the address he gave them and they sent an ambulance in response. As Dr. Westwood was rushed to the hospital, his breathing became increasingly difficult.

Doctor's Notes

The patient presented in the ED with severe headache, diaphoresis, motor dysfunction, paresthesias, nausea, and an ascending paralysis that spread to the upper body, arms, face, and head. The patient was cyanotic and was hypoventilating. Within 30 minutes of presenting in the ED, Dr. Westwood developed bradycardia with a BP of 90/50. Atropine was administered in response to the bradycardia. IV hydration, gastric lavage, and activated charcoal followed a presumptive diagnosis of tetrodotoxin poisoning based on the clinical presentation in the ED. Five hours after intervention, the following vitals were noted:

- BP 125/79
- HR 78bpm
- Oxygen saturation: 97% on room air

Follow-up

Within a few hours, Dr. Westwood's condition improved and he was on his way to a full recovery. After discussing his case with his physician, he learned that he had probably been the victim of a pufferfish poisoning. The active toxin in the tissues of this fish is a chemical called tetrodotoxin. Tetrodotoxin is in a class of chemicals known as neurotoxins due to the fact that it has its effects on nerve cells (neurons). Specifically, tetrodotoxin blocks voltage-gated sodium ion channels on neurons.

Questions

1. Present the “Doctor's Notes” portion of the case with a description of the following terms or concepts:
  - diaphoresis
  - motor dysfunction
