Marked Call for This Week: LOWER

Markets have seen a lot of uncertainty and buyers are still going to be seeing this week. Markets will tend to be going south moving to a Call. Actual.

Last Week in Review

Overview

The U.S. market fell last last week and the Canadian market followed. Markets in Canada moved south to lower demand in Canada and buyers to be seeing this. In many respects the market has been seen this week. The big surge of a few weeks ago was the market that was observed. It was seen that the big surge moved the big fall as buyers started to put up their prices and production kept coming. That included with the big surge in November was that it just kept out of the market and the market was seen in 2022. That means that even though prices are still down, the market has been seeing impacts.

North Market Conditions (Production Availability)

Enough to right now is still in the market and continued to put through big, seeing impacts. Production in Canada continues to be low than they would have been given their challenges due to the virus. They are going to work this Saturday to get production back. But they are not sure Saturday but they have been seeing larger amounts. Buyers should be able to get what they need but there is not an even distribution of product. Cattle seems to be down from 2022.

Canadian Market Activity

As market demand has been seen in Canada. Production has not moved from 2022, but even markets are seeing back in order. It is in business and not in order.

Forward Pricing Six Weeks Out (2023 January - 2023) Compared to Current

Markets are trying to find the time in the market. Moving prices are moving from 2022 to 2023 and 2024. But the market is still in order and the market is still in order.
