Name: _____

The Digestive System

Introduction: The foods that we eat contain the nutrients that our body cells need to do their daily jobs, grow, and multiply. Nutrients such as carbohydrates, proteins, lipids, vitamins, minerals, and water are bound up in our food, though. How do we get these important nutrients out of our food and into our cells? That is the job of the digestive system! Digestion is the process of breaking down food into smaller molecules that the body can use.

The digestive system is broken down into two groups of organs: organs that food enters and organs that food does not enter. Organs that food physically passes through make up the gastrointestinal tract. The gastrointestinal tract is often referred to as the GI tract, digestive tract, or alimentary canal. This long, winding tube starts at the mouth and coils through the body, ending at the anus. In a living adult, this tract is usually between 16 and 23 feet! Think about how tall you are. Your gastrointestinal tract is more than three times your height! Organs included in the gastrointestinal tract are the mouth, pharynx, esophagus, stomach, small intestine, large intestine, rectum, and anus.

Organs that do not have food enter them (but help with digestion) are known as accessory organs. These organs help with the breakdown of food, but do not hold or contain food at any time. They aid digestion by creating chemicals or applying force to help break down food. The accessory organs include the teeth, tongue, salivary glands, liver, gallbladder, and pancreas.

After food has been broken down into smaller units by chemical and mechanical digestion, absorption is able to occur. In the process of absorption, nutrients pass through the wall of the gastrointestinal tract into the bloodstream.

Lastly, defecation or elimination occurs when unabsorbed materials are eliminated from the body as feces. It takes food between 1 and 5 days to pass through the GI tract from mouth to anus.
