SHORT-ANSWER QUESTIONS

 7-1 Static budget variance can mislead those assessing actual against pro forma performance indicators. The key issue is that when production and sales volume exceed pro forma amounts, an unfavourable cost variance analysis is an inevitable result of what is usually considered good news. Managers may waste valuable time investigating routine-cost behaviour.

 7-2 Management by exception is the practice of concentrating on areas not operating as anticipated and giving less attention to areas operating as anticipated. Variance analysis helps managers identify areas not operating as anticipated. The larger the variance, the more likely an area is not operating as anticipated.

 7-3 A favourable variance—denoted F—is a variance that increases operating income relative to the budgeted amount. An unfavourable variance—denoted U—is a variance that decreases operating income relative to the budgeted amount.

 7-4 The key difference is the output level used to set the budget. A static budget is based on the level of output planned at the start of the budget period. A flexible budget is developed using budgeted revenues or cost amounts based on the level of output actually achieved in the budget period. The actual level of output is not known until the end of the budget period. Flexible budgets give managers more insight into the causes of variances than static budgets.

 7-5 The steps in developing a flexible budget are:

- Step 1: Determine the budgeted selling price per unit, the budgeted variable costs per unit, and the budgeted fixed costs.
- Step 2: Determine the actual quantity of the revenue driver.
- Step 3: Determine the flexible budget for revenue based on the budgeted unit revenue and the actual quantity of the revenue driver.
- Step 4: Determine the actual quantity of the cost driver(s).
- Step 5: Determine the flexible budget for costs based on the budgeted unit variable costs and fixed costs and the actual quantity of the cost driver(s).

 7-6 Four reasons for using standard costs are:

- (i) cost management,
- (ii) pricing decisions,
