

When the first Boeing F3D took off from Renton on Feb. April 1967 more of the people involved realized that this was the maiden flight of the most successful passenger aircraft of all time. From the outset the F3D, the Baby Jet, was overshadowed by the successful F32, which had already been developed and built in large numbers to meet the demand for a short-haul airliner that would take over from the turbo-prop aircraft that dominated this sector of the market. The F32 was designed, constructed and flown by Lockheed's Skunk Works to build such an aircraft and that already placed Boreo, too, in the front rank of the world's leading aircraft designers. The F3D-10C, in the form supplied to Luftwaffe as the first airline, quickly followed the F32-10G, which had a somewhat longer fuselage and wing area than the F32-10G, and it was also fitted with a particular interest for the American market. It also had improved flying capabilities which enabled it to serve airports with shorter runways, bringing them into the jet age. As well as carrying with most Boeing jets a maximum of 80 passengers, the F3D-10C could also be converted rapidly for conversion as the passenger seats were jettisoned. These planes were given the designation QC for Quick Change. The F3D-10C has been used extensively by the U.S. military and is now part of the American Air Force. The USMC ordered TS type F-3BAs to serve as navigation trainers for the USN Training Command. After only six years in production 500 of the various versions of the Boeing F3D have been produced. So far 2,500 planes have been sold and the rest is somewhere in sight. Engines: 2 Pratt & Whitney TF30-TS or TPC, Capacity: 2,500 kg. Speed: 340 km/h. Range: 4,000 km. Max. take-off weight: 10,000 kg.
