

Chapter 54 - Community Ecology

54.1: Interactions between species can help, harm, or have no effect on the individuals involved.

Interspecific interactions are interactions between organisms of different species living in the same community.

- Competition (- / -), an interaction that occurs when individuals of different species use a resource that limits the survival of both species.
- This can also happen for members of a single species. (Intraspecific Competition)
- Competitive Exclusion – Two species that compete for the same resource and have the same niche cannot survive indefinitely in the same area. One species will always outcompete the other and the loser goes extinct.
- Competition for limited resources can lead to changes in populations and the species' ecological niche.
 - Ecological Niche – The specific set of biotic and abiotic resources that an organism uses in its environment.
 - Fundamental Niche – The potential a species' ecological niche could become without competition.
 - Realized niche – The current ecological niche of a species with competition and resource partitioning.
 - Evolution changes species' ecological niche, allowing it to bypass competitive exclusion and have a slightly different niche.
- Exploitation (+ / -), an interaction when one species benefit and the other is harmed.
 - Predation is an interaction where an individual of one species kills
 - Predators adapt to find prey easier, and prey adapts to hide from the predators
