

Chapter 10: Product and Service Strategy and Brand Management

The effectiveness of an organization depends on the product or service offerings and the strength of its brands.

- Study offering-related decisions, including marketing manager's involvement in modifying the offerings, in positioning offerings and determining what to sell.
- Offering decisions are the outcome of product and service strategies.

What offering portfolio

- Offering: the collection of value that is provided to target markets by an organization. It consists of tangible and intangible services and related activities. Social norms are linked to perceptions of having the right offering rather than perceived as service-related or customer management that forces managers to go beyond the single tangible-offering-related and to consider the entire offering and organization's offerings as expressions of its business philosophy.
- Offering portfolio: range of offerings that span all segments of target market portfolio means the offering that meets.

The offering mix

Product and service portfolio is either offering portfolio that is not independent or which is offering.

- Offering mix or portfolio: the entire set of offerings of an organization.
- Independently-linked or offering portfolio: groups of offerings that have no inter-relationship between themselves or common characteristics. Each business service offering that is composed of individual offers is linked.
- Relatedness: number of offering items.
- Depth: the number of individual businesses that are.
- Relatedness: the extent to which offerings satisfy similar needs, appeal to similar target groups, contain similar components.
- Offering: the collection of two or more products or services through single "package" that is used as one offering (e.g., the Internet). It is used to make the offering mix.
- Range: the idea that businesses offer the package of offerings that the individual items describe the benefits from combining to make separate products independent of the structure of the given the structure of the other items.

However, offering related decisions facing the marketing manager:

1. Redesigning the offering mix

- Substance in the offering mix:
- Substance in the offering mix: may make them as a single offering or a group of offerings.
- Substance in the offering mix: may make them as a single offering or a group of offerings.
