sensations of that war He was also an expert horseman a man who knew everything there was to be known about horses and horse racing winning prizes at polo matches and race meetings Returning from South Africa The Banjo as he always signed himself worked for Sydney newspapers and travelled to China and England where he stayed with his friend the poet Rudyard Kipling and for a while led a relatively sedentary life as editor of The Sydney Evening News At the outbreak of World War One he failed to get accreditation as a war correspondent and served as an ambulance driver in France and finally to Egypt where he headed a team of rough riders and trained horses Major Paterson came back to Sydney to edit The Sportsman and the earliest collection of traditional bush songs and to become a popular and well known broadcaster in the early days of radio By the time he died everyone in Australia knew the verses of Waltzing Matilda but scarcely anyone could have told you they had been written by Banjo Paterson as he had sold the copyright outright for five pounds A Lifetime of Outdoor
