

A Divided Nation

In 1787, 13 American states pledged to join together to "create a more perfect union." The writers of the constitution hoped this union would last forever, but they knew it would not be easy.

The glue that held America together began to unravel in 1820. At this time, the United States had an equal number of slave and free states. Missouri would tip the balance. Trouble was avoided when Congress passed the Missouri Compromise. Missouri was added as a slave state and Maine was added as a free state. This kept the number of slave and free states equal and a boundary was established that would not allow future slave states north of Missouri's southern border. This was the famous latitude line of 36° 30'. This gave the country time to focus on other issues.

The hard lessons between the North and South would not go away. A mini war broke out in 1854 when Congress voted to repeal the Missouri Compromise and passed the Kansas-Nebraska Act. The act gave Kansas and Nebraska the right to vote on whether or not they wanted slavery. This idea of people's choice was called popular sovereignty. Most Texans were happy with the Kansas-Nebraska Act but angry at their own U.S. Senator Sam Houston, who had voted against it. Houston did not think slavery should be allowed to expand into the Northern prairies. This was an unusual position for a Southerner to take.

Tensions continued to build and in 1859, a white abolitionist named John Brown tried to start a slave uprising and attack the federal arsenal in Harper's Ferry, Virginia. Some Southerners felt invaded and many feared a widespread slave revolt would happen across the nation. In 1860, an anti-slavery man named Abraham Lincoln was elected president. Southerners were done. Led by South Carolina, six Southern states left the Union to form the Confederate States of America. This alarmed Sam Houston who was now the governor of Texas. He believed a civil war would be a tragedy for the nation and disaster for the South. He did not believe the South could win but most Texans disagreed with him. On March 2, 1861, Texas became the 7th state to secede from the Union. Houston refused to take an oath of loyalty to the new confederacy and was forced to resign.

How did the Missouri Compromise limit the growth of slavery?

How did Sam Houston's opinions compare to most Texans on the Kansas-Nebraska Act?

What event in 1859 increased the tensions between the North and South?

What evidence is there that Governor Houston felt strongly against secession?
