Digital Technologies and Public Procurement Albert Sanchez-Graells, 2024-01-10 The digital transformation of the public sector has accelerated States are experimenting with technology seeking more streamlined and efficient digital government and public services However there are significant concerns about the risks and harms to individual and collective rights under new modes of digital public governance Several jurisdictions are attempting to regulate digital technologies especially artificial intelligence however regulatory effort primarily concentrates on technology use by companies not by governments The regulatory gap underpinning public sector digitalisation is growing As it controls the acquisition of digital technologies public procurement has emerged as a regulatory fix to govern public sector digitalisation It seeks to ensure through its contracts that public sector digitalisation is trustworthy ethical responsible transparent fair and cyber safe However in Digital Technologies and Public Procurement Gatekeeping and Experimentation in Digital Public Governance Albert Sanchez Graells argues that procurement cannot perform this gatekeeping role effectively Through a detailed case study of procurement digitalisation as a site of unregulated technological experimentation he demonstrates that relying on regulation by contract creates a false sense of security in governing the transition towards digital public governance This leaves the public sector exposed to the policy irresistibility that surrounds hyped digital technologies Bringing together insights from political economy public policy science technology and legal scholarship this thought provoking book proposes an alternative regulatory approach and contributes to broader debates of digital constitutionalism and digital technology regulation
