

Cold War Conflicts

Friendship: Due to some wars, political issues, and fear of communism, the US and USSR came close to going to war. Although we never went to war with the Soviets, directly, we did have Proxy Wars, or wars fought with third party nations in fear of fighting a nation directly.

1. Cuban Missile Crisis

Cuba was the first nation in the western hemisphere to have a communist revolution. Fidel Castro and his band of communist guerrilla fighters were able to stage a coup & take over Cuba and turn the island red with communism. The Soviets saw this as an opportunity to reach out to this side of the world and use Cuba as a base for their espionage and military operations toward the USA. The Soviets placed missiles in Cuba and positioned them toward the USA. John F. Kennedy was president at the time and due to a communication mistake, discovered the missiles in Cuba. In a show of force, Kennedy sent a blockade around Cuba while the Soviets also sent several ships to protect Cuba. For 13 days there was a standoff between the USA and the Soviets and each nation had their finger on the nuclear ready to launch those missiles. On the 14th day, the Soviets backed down and pulled away and everyone could breathe again. It was the closest we had been to nuclear war.

1. Korean Conflict

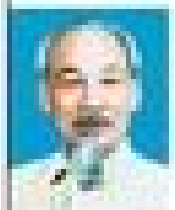

Japan withdrew from Korea after WWII, but politically the nation is divided, the northern part of Korea favors communism while the south favors democracy. In 1950, war broke out between the two groups. Thanks to our policy of containment, the United States felt it necessary to help us in Korea favor communism. The other reason is what we called the Domino Theory. This idea is based from the concern that if one nation becomes communist, other nations surrounding them would also fall to communism.

Our main objective was to ensure Korea under a democratic government. General Douglas MacArthur was sent to lead the troops against the communists. MacArthur was successful in pushing the communists back but Truman ordered him to not push the communists past the Yalu River. Truman's concern was that it was too close to China and he feared the Chinese would get involved to help these fellow communists, and that was something we were not prepared to handle. MacArthur does not listen, he pushed the communists beyond the Yalu River and just as Truman feared, the Chinese joined in.

With help from the Chinese, the Korean communists were able to push back and eventually gain control of the northern part of Korea once again. This established a holding in the north for the communists and to end the conflict it was decided that the nation would be split in half at the 38th parallel. To this day, the 38th is known as the Demilitarized Zone which separates North Korea from South Korea. North Korea remains communist and South Korea is a democracy.

3. Vietnam In the 1900s during the age of imperialism, Vietnam was established as a French colony. But after WWII, there was a movement for independence led by Ho Chi Minh, a Vietnamese communist political leader. In the 1950s, the movement turned into Civil War. The United States decided to support the French due to the Truman Doctrine and Domino Theory. While in the beginning we just supported the French, the French was unable to make any military gains and were defeated leaving Vietnam divided into North and South Vietnam at the 17th parallel.
