Introduction

Teacher is not a dispenser of knowledge or a person in charge of the educating that goes on in a classroom. Moreover, is one of producing the climate providing the resources, stimulating the students to explore, investigate and seek answer, in a rich environment than a director (Howes, 2007) The teacher must also see the nobility and capacity in each student recognizing that a lack of opportunity is different from lack of capacity. Competent teacher produces excellent students (Costa AL). Tan 2002) stated that effective instructions in studies can only be realized when the teacher is efficient in the subject content and in the methods of teaching the subject. One of the key points of social studies education is not only to teach people studies of facts, but on how to learn social inquiry to equip The country's students for the challenges not only of higher education, also in the lifelong learning. Moreover, according to Jacetot (1997) teaching is something that takes place only when learning does. No matter what the teacher is doing in her class, if the students are not learning something significant, she is not teaching. Furthermore, Bernardo (2007) posited that the supreme valve of a teacher lies not only in the regular performances of routine duties, but in his power to lead and inspire his students through the influence of his/her own mental and moral personality example..

Background of the Study

Social Studies is one of the most useful and important subjects taught in school. It has been on existence since the beginning of time as people of certain ancient civilizations make use of studying and putting into account the events of the past to help keep them on track and move forward through different innovations. History serves as the base to create certain advanced technologies or instruments to promote and prosper a better way of living. One example is the pyramids of Egypt. As historian's study the Egyptians past, culture and techniques in creating such indestructible structures of the pyramid, they have proven the great importance contributed by history through similar infrastructures we see today which adopts the way the pyramids were built. Generally speaking, social studies, be it named "History" or "Araling Panlipunan" in more basic terms, feeds the curiosity of every individual, resulting in our present generations better way of living, with each one owning their personal sense of the "how's" and "whys" of every event. An effective or successful learning of Social Studies therefore leaves a community knowledgeable.

As to how important Social Studies is as subject, teachers create an impact as to whether or not the students have captured the concepts of the said subject every time they deliver certain topics. The interest felt by the students for the subject is generated by the teacher. If subject such as the Social Studies is interesting or inviting, it is of great certainty that the students will gain at least enough interest to listen and learn from
