Chapter 2 Acgih:

Mandated Science: Science and Scientists in the Making of Standards L. Salter, W. Leiss, Edwin Levy, 2012-12-06 For a long time I would not eat strawberries In 1977 a scandal broke about a testing laboratory having falsified the data that was used to register a large number of pesticides The Canadian government along with several others began the process of re evaluating both the procedures for testing and these specific chemicals One chemical proved particularly controversial the commonly used pesticide named captan In light of the controversy which was manifest in a conflict between two government departments in 1981 the Canadian government chose to appoint a special panel of experts to advise them I was a member of this expert committee The experience on the captan committee did little to reassure me either about captan or about the way that decisions had been made about many pesticides in widespread use Although it could not be demonstrated that captan was dangerous to people in the amounts to which they would likely be exposed the animal studies provided the basis for concern Prudence required at the very least that consumers take the precaution of washing their fruit for captan is widely used on apples cherries and berry fruits Captan residues wash off apples relatively easily they are less easily removed from berry fruits such as straw berries

M. Mendeloff,1988 In this provocative study John Mendeloff shows that federal programs which set standards for toxic substances have twin dilemmas The new standards that they establish are usually too strict and costly to justify the benefits they confer But at the same time the slow pace of standard setting means that many serious hazards are never addressed at all Mendeloff argues that more extensive but less strict rulemaking could make both industry and workers better off and that changes in legislation are required to break the current stalemate Mendeloff looks at workplace risks regulated and not regulated by OSHA He discusses the thorny issue of how much our society should value the prevention of occupational disease deaths His innovative investigation of underregulation brings together diverse data to show that moderate reductions in current exposure levels would often be beneficial Regulating Toxic Substances makes a major contribution to our understanding of how regulation works by demonstrating that the strictness with which standards are set is a major cause of the slow pace Administrative rulemaking procedures offer opportunities for those concerned about the reasonableness of standards judges and other public officials as well as the affected industries to try to block or delay them An important implication is that less strict standards would not necessarily reduce overall protection and might increase it In a major discussion of regulatory reform Mendeloff analyzes such alternatives to standard setting as information and liability strategies and such generic changes in regulatory procedures as regulatory budget and regulatory negotiation Finding that neither provides a sufficient response to the overregulation underregulation problem he proposes a three step legislative package that could be applied at OSHA and other standard setting agencies John Mendeloff is a policy analyst affiliated with the Program in Science Technology and Public Affairs at the University of California San Diego This book is seventeenth in the series Regulation of Economic Activity edited by Richard Schmalensee Michigan Facilities' Guide to SARA Title III
