2.1.1.1. Describe the reductionist and holistic approaches for studying behavior. In 1964, a group of scientists, including the leader of national neuroscience research, Francis Crick, published the paper "The Wakerabbit: A Study in the Discharge of the Brain for a Period of One Hour Following the Death of the Animal." Psychological terms brought into question the brain as a source of studying aspects of neurobiology.

2.1: Biological Models of Behavior

Learning Objectives

1. 2.1.1.1.1. Describe the reductionist and holistic approaches for studying behavior.
2. 2.1.1.1.2. Describe the reductionist and holistic approaches for studying behavior.
3. 2.1.1.1.3. Describe the reductionist and holistic approaches for studying behavior.

Psychologists want to know how and why a behavior occurs. To achieve this goal, they use a variety of methods. One of the most common is the reductionist approach, which involves breaking down a behavior into its component parts. This approach is based on the idea that a behavior is the result of a specific set of factors, and that by understanding these factors, we can understand the behavior. The reductionist approach is often used in the study of the brain, where researchers try to identify the specific parts of the brain that are responsible for a particular behavior. Another approach is the holistic approach, which involves looking at the behavior as a whole, rather than trying to break it down into its component parts. This approach is based on the idea that a behavior is the result of a complex set of factors, and that by understanding the whole, we can understand the behavior. The holistic approach is often used in the study of the mind, where researchers try to understand the behavior as a whole, rather than trying to break it down into its component parts. Both approaches have their strengths and weaknesses, and it is often best to use a combination of the two.

2.1a Reductionism and Holistic Models

1. 2.1a.1.1. Describe the reductionist and holistic approaches for studying behavior.

In the following section, we will introduce two approaches to the study of human behavior: the reductionist approach and the holistic approach. We will discuss the strengths and weaknesses of each approach and how they can be used to study human behavior.
