The Civil War Begins

By the 1800s, the United States was deeply divided over slavery. The Northern states did not want slavery to spread, while many Southern states depended on it for their farms and plantations. The disagreement grew so serious that in 1860, when Abraham Lincoln was elected president, some Southern states decided to secede, or break away, from the Union. They formed their own government called the Confederacy.

The Civil War officially began on April 12, 1861, when Confederate soldiers fired on Fort Sumter, a Union fort in South Carolina. After a day and a half of fighting, the Union soldiers surrendered the fort. The news of the battle spread quickly, and more states joined the Confederacy.

President Lincoln called for volunteers to fight for the Union, and thousands of men signed up. Families across the country worried as fathers, brothers, and sons prepared to go to war. People realized that this would not be a quick or easy fight.

The beginning of the Civil War marked a turning point in American history. The nation was now split in two, and both sides were willing to fight for what they believed in. The war would last four long years and become one of the most difficult times in the nation's history.
