

Q.10: Define resistance.

Ans: Resistance:

The electrical resistance of a circuit is the ratio between the voltage applied to the current flowing through it. According to Ohm's law, there is a relation between the current flowing through a conductor and the potential difference across it. It is given by

$$R = \frac{V}{I}$$

where V is the potential difference measured across the conductor (in volt), I is the current (ampere), R is the constant of proportionality, and is called resistance (ohms)

Unit of Resistance:

The unit of electrical resistance is ohms.

$$R = \frac{V}{I}$$

$$1 \text{ ohm} = \frac{1 \text{ volt}}{1 \text{ ampere}}$$

Electric charge flows easily through some materials than others. The electrical resistance measures how much the flow of this electric charge is restricted within the circuit.

Q.11: Describe the factor affecting the resistance.

Ans: Factor Affecting the Resistance:

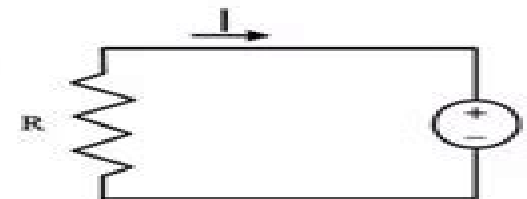

Electrical resistance is directly proportional to the length (L) of the conductor and inversely proportional to the cross-sectional area (A). It is given by the following relation:

$$R = \rho \frac{L}{A}$$

where ρ is the resistivity of the material measured in Ωm (ohm meter).

Resistivity is a qualitative measurement of a material's ability to resist flowing electric current.

Insulators will have a higher value of resistivity than that of conductors. Electrical resistance is inversely proportional to the temperature of a metallic conductor because the random motion of free electrons increases and offers more resistance in a metallic conductor.
