

The Creation story is a poem written in prose style and is not meant to report scientific data but to communicate a profound theological meditation on the act of creation. Also Read CCC 279-301 and CCC 315-324.

There are 2 accounts of Creation in the Bible. Ancient Hebrew story telling used what is known as the "synoptic-resumptive" technique. The first account tells the story in "broad strokes" ("synoptic") while the second account resumes and focuses on details ("resumptive").

The creation story is a wonderful prose poem; its purpose is not to report scientific data but to communicate a profound theological meditation on the act of creation. The creation account and Psalm 104 both envision the heavens as a dome and the earth upheld by pillars because the poet is communicating the meaning of creation, showing that creation is a temple and pointing us to our end, which is praise and worship of the Creator. In Genesis, God simply speaks, and creation comes into being ex nihilo, "out of nothing."

The aspect of the creation story that is the most important—and the most misread—is the seven-day format in which creation is set. It is especially here that readers, viewing the biblical narrative through the lens of modern science, reduce the biblical narrative and thus miss the meaning that the seven-day structure is meant to convey.

The temple structure of creation is built in the first three days and then furnished in the second three days. The one day that stands apart is the seventh day. The seventh day is holy and represents divine rest.

In the Bible, the number 7 signifies completion and perfection. God's creation of the world in 7 days signifies that he is making a covenant with his creation. From the beginning, this covenant was God's way of making man and woman not simply his creation but also his sons and daughters.

1. What does it mean that man was created in the image and likeness of God? (Refer to CCC 356-357).

Answer	Man is the "only creature on earth that God has willed for its own sake, and he alone is called to share by his knowledge and love in God's own life. He is capable of self-knowledge, of self-possession and of freely giving himself and entering communication with other persons. And he is called by grace to a covenant with his Creator to offer him a response of faith and love that
