

CYCLES AND SEASONS: MOTIONS IN THE SKY

Note. A solar day is the amount of time between successive solar noons (when the Sun is at its highest point in the sky). This is taken to be 24 hours.

Note. A sidereal day is the amount of time it takes a particular star to travel from its highest point in the sky, back to that point. This is 23 hours and 56 minutes.

- The longer length of a solar day is due to the fact that the Earth moves (a small amount) in its orbit while it completes a rotation on its axis.

Note. Returning to the celestial sphere, the meridian is the imaginary line on the celestial sphere that passes from the north, overhead, to due south. We can now redefine solar day and sidereal in terms of transits of the sun or a star (respectively) across the meridian.

Note. We can project the Earth's north pole, south pole, and equator onto the celestial sphere

- We can also project the lines of latitude onto the celestial sphere producing declination lines (ranging from -90° to 90°). If we project lines of longitude we will generate right ascension lines. These are measured in hours, minutes, and seconds and declination and right ascension are called the equatorial coordinate system. Since the axis of the Earth is tilted (with respect to its plane of orbit about the Sun), over a year the Sun traces out a circle on the celestial sphere that intersects the celestial equator in two points. This circle (on which the planets travel) is called the ecliptic first point of Aries (although the point presently lies in Pisces). The Earth's axis "wobbles" however and the first point of Aries slowly moves. When the point enters Aquarius, this will make the "Age of Aquarius."

Note. The constellations through which the ecliptic passes are called the zodiac. The position of the Sun determines "your sign"

Note. The Earth's axis is tilted $23\frac{1}{2}^\circ$ with respect to its orbit.

- Due to the tilt, there are places on the Earth where the Sun will be overhead at some time during the year. These are the tropics. There are also places where there is a day when the Sun never rises. These are the arctic and antarctic.
