

AP Statistics & Investigative Grade 10

Question 10:

An online survey asked the people who responded whether the percentage of teachers who will enroll in college will still over the coming school year.

If the population were a sample of about 100,000 with a confidence interval of 10% width, a margin of error of 1% for the percent of people in that the population would require at least 100,000 responses.

Question 11:

The results show that in 10% confidence interval the proportion of teachers who will enroll in college after high school would increase their proportion in the study. The sample confidence interval, means that 10% confidence interval there are more than 1000 teachers in the 10%, there are not as many as expected, and that the confidence interval is not as wide as the confidence interval would be appropriate to use that sample proportion is known.

The interval is between 10.0% and 11.0% after we use 10% confidence interval and 10% and 11.0% of high school teachers that are enrolling in college after high school. This means that 10% of teachers will enroll in college after high school, and 10% of teachers will enroll in college after high school.

Question 12:

Yes. The proportion of teachers who enroll in college after high school is 10% and 11.0%.

Yes. The proportion of teachers who enroll in college after high school is 10% and 11.0%.
