The Scramble for Africa

Africa Before European Colonisation

Africa before European colonisation in the late 19th century. Africa was a continent rich in diverse cultures, languages and peoples.

African kingdoms, empires and states interacted with their own systems of governance, trade and agriculture.

Major kingdoms included the Ashanti Kingdom in West Africa, the Kingdom of Kongo in Central Africa, and the Zulu Kingdom in South Africa.

These societies were complex and vibrant, with their own traditions, languages and ways of life.

European Colonisation of Africa

The Scramble for Africa refers to the period in the late 19th century when European powers raced to colonise and control African territories.

This race began around the 1870s and ended with the early 1900s.

European powers like Britain, France, Germany, Belgium and Portugal competed fiercely to claim African lands.

By the end of the century, almost the entire continent was under European control, with only a few regions like Ethiopia and Liberia remaining independent.

The Scramble for Africa

Before the Scramble for Africa, most of Africa was divided into small kingdoms and chiefdoms. These societies were rich in culture and tradition, but they were often weak and divided.

One of the main reasons for the Scramble for Africa was the desire for raw materials and new markets for European goods.

The Scramble for Africa was a period of intense competition between European powers to claim African territories.

The Scramble for Africa

and Colonisation

Colonisation of Africa had a profound impact on the continent's history and development.

Colonisation led to the loss of African land and resources, and it imposed European culture and values on African societies. This led to the destruction of African traditions and the imposition of European systems of governance and education.

Colonisation also led to the exploitation of African labour and resources for the benefit of European powers. This led to the development of a capitalist economy in Africa, which was based on the extraction of raw materials and the export of goods to Europe.

Despite the negative impact of colonisation, it also led to the development of a modern infrastructure in Africa, including roads, railways, and ports. This infrastructure was essential for the economic development of the continent.
