

2. Chapter 20: The Market in Financial Markets

14. According to traditional theory, interest rates are high when investors expect the government to default on its debt. Explain the following statement by Ray Banerjee:

The bond market is not a homogeneous group of investors different from the government itself. It is made up of many different groups.

1. "Short-term rate-paying investors are different from long-term investors."	Short-term investors (such as pension funds) are more likely to be risk averse than long-term investors. Long-term investors are more likely to be risk neutral. Short-term investors are more likely to be risk averse than long-term investors. • Risk averse investors are "prone to overreact to changes in perceived risk" and therefore will sell their bonds more quickly than they would otherwise.
