BMW R1100GS

DUAL-PURPOSE
DONE DIFFERENTLY

For adventure touring, the GS can be equipped with a variety of top cases and saddlebags, a locking and heated handgrip. Other options include ABS, a catalytic converter, an anti-theft warning system and a radio-information display. No word yet whether a larger-lunged Paris-Dakar rally-nightmare model will be offered.

on-road-only-cooled boxer Twin and be equipped with BMW's innovative Telelever front suspension, the GS makes the seven-gale R1100GS sport-tourer look positively plucky by comparison. That's among the new boxer's styling tricks and low-hanging rear mudguards that are now capped off by a protrusion of a front fender that protrudes from a headlight/windscreen/instrument cluster mounted about a foot ahead of the top triple clamp. Sorry, boxer would love it.

Some interesting technical features back up the GS's boxer looks. While the fuel-injected, four-valve-per-cylinder

Just now comes a BMW's new R1100GS adventure bike? The official line, expressed in the company's European press kit, is that the GS "combines a wealth of power and control cues, making its variety without short-lived features which would merely confuse. Being German-made."

"Translation, please? I think they wanted to make it look like a three-wheeled pack horse, which is how people see the bike. It's an adventure tourist, it looks like it has a purpose," says Bob Mitchell, BMW's U.S. press spokesman.

The second take is that the Type R1100GS is a pack horse.

Standard equipment included rubber and steel wheels, cylinder guards, ABS, gear and lug-pipe rack. The front portion of the seat is height-adjustable (23.1 or 23.8 inches); the rear portion is removable to reveal an extended lug-pipe rack. BMW's "corner spade" wheels—19-inch front, 17-inch rear—allow use of tubular tires. Fuel tank is plastic, holds 6.4 gallons.

Coming late this spring to a BMW dealer near you, the R1100GS, unlike the sport-touring RS model, which has a non-adjustable front end, the GS's Telelever shock has five spring-preload settings. Wheel travel front and rear is increased over the RS. Claimed dry weight is up, as well, by 8 pounds to 516. Three color schemes will be available: red, white or black, all with yellow seats (a black seat is an option). As of press time BMW had not set the GS's price, but a good guess would put it in the $11,000 range.

engine displaces the same 1100cc as the RS model, its horsepower has been tapped off more is claimed 88 versus the RS's 90, courtesy of different camshafts, altered valve timing, lower compression ratio (10.1:1 against 10.7:1) and a restricted engine-management system. Torque increases from 51 foot-pounds at 5500 rpm to 72 at 5250.

A departure from the old-style R1000GS could be available in '94, which used a single-disc front brake. In the new GS's dual-disc setup, identical to the R1100RS's. For the first time, antilock braking will be available on a dual-purpose bike, with BMW's ABS II offered as an option. The GS system differs from the street-only version in that it can be deactivated by the rider for off-road riding, where ABS can sometimes be more of a hindrance than a help.

Technical features aside, the big question surrounding the 1994 GS centers on its styling. BMW's big on-road-only Twin has always been something of a cult bike, valued as much for its off-road styling as for its versatility and let's
