

"A Child Called It" by Dave Pelzer

11th - 12th grade

To ensure that you are able to have meaningful conversations with your students about this book, I do not provide answers to the questions. I encourage you to take the time to read the book, or at the very least, the cliff notes, so that you discover the answers for yourselves.

This book was used in my Banned Books class for seniors, but it can also be used in a high school psychology class. This lesson plan encourages critical thinking about a difficult subject while also addressing the book's banned status.

You will need to develop your own grading rubric for this unit. I only graded writing assignments and discussion participation.

Day 1

- Introduce the book and its themes of child abuse, resilience, and survival.
- Discuss the reasons for the book's banning (perceived content: abuse) and the importance of addressing difficult topics in literature. (Helps students develop a sense of empathy, facilitates conversation on difficult subjects, can be therapeutic for children living the same experience, etc.)
- For discussion:
 - What is the difference between an autobiography and a memoir?
 - Foreshadowing – review with students what foreshadowing is.
 - Discuss the reading schedule and provide trigger warnings about the graphic content.
 - Any guesses why the book has been titled "A Child Called It", emphasis on the "It". (The odds are that they will have no idea, but they will have fun coming up with ideas. Students will explore this again at the end of the book.)
- Reading: pages 3-26

Day 2

- For discussion:
 - Introduce Erik Erikson's stages of Psychosocial Development using the following video and the chart in Appendix A: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=8d020000000>
 - Give each student a copy of the chart, and ask them to identify what stage of development they are currently in. How did they come to that conclusion?
- Read: pages 29-43
