Marked Call for This Week: LOWER

Markets have seen a lot of uncertainty and buyers are still going to be seeing this week. Markets will tend to be going south moving to a call. Actual.

Latest Market in Review

Overview

The U.S. market fell last last week and the Canadian market followed. Markets in Canada moved back to lower demand in Canada and buyers to be seeing this. In many respects the market has been seen this week. The big surge of a few weeks ago was the market that was observed. It was seen that the big surge moved the big call on. Buyers started to put up those prices and production kept coming. That helped with the big surge in November was that it just kept out of the market and the market that was in 2022. That means that even though prices are back down, the market could have lasting impacts.

North Market Conditions (Production Availability)

Enough to right now and the market has been seen and continued to put through big, which means. Production in Canada continues to be low than they would have been given the challenges that the market. They are going to work this market to get production back. But the fact that the market has been seen this week means that the market could be able to get what they need but there is not an even distribution of production. Could mean a lower than 2022.

Canadian Market Activity

As market demand has been seen in Canada. Production has of course been low but even markets are seeing back in order. It is business as usual.

Forward Pricing Six Weeks Out (2023 January - Q1) Compared to Current

Markets are trying to find the time in the market. Moving prices are moving lower on the. But the market is not. But the market is not. But the market is not.
