

TROUBLESHOOTING & GENERAL PROCEDURES

When tuning motorcycle carburetors, there are several procedures and preliminary checks that will make the tuning and troubleshooting process go smoothly and quickly.

1. In order for carburetors to work properly, the engine must be in good mechanical condition. All of the following parameters should be checked in order to proceed with the carburetor tuning.

- A. Compression - all cylinders should be within 10% of each other according to cranking compression.
- B. Valve Adjustment / Cam Timing - check valve clearance according to the factory service manual, consult a qualified technician if there is any question about the cam timing.
- C. Ignition Quality - adjust point gap and ignition timing according to the factory service manual. Double check the gap and install new spark plug prior to any carburetor tuning.
- D. Air Filter Quality - Check to see that the air filter is clean and that all baffles and snorkels are in place, or have been removed as necessary for increased airflow. In any case, the air box / air filter dimensions should be finalized.
- E. Exhaust System - Install all mufflers and baffles. Double check all silencer packing and baffle installations. Finalize all exhaust system specifications before moving on to the carburetors. Jetting can vary dramatically according to muffler / baffle selection.

2. All fuel delivery circuits operate according to throttle position. In order to determine which circuit to tune, one must know the throttle opening at which there is a problem. Do not use R.P.M. to determine which circuit to tune. Sadeo suggests the use of a throttle index on the twist grip to track the exact throttle opening of the carburetor.

Throttle Index

- A. Place a piece of masking tape across the throttle housing adjacent to the twist grip so that it is visible from the riding position.
- B. Install a colored push pin or sewing pin into the throttle grip flange adjacent to the masking tape. Adjust the throttle cable free play to near zero.
- C. With the throttle closed, make a "0" mark on the masking tape adjacent to the pin head on the throttle flange.
- D. Open the throttle all the way and make a "W.O.T." mark on the masking tape adjacent to the pin head.
- E. Using a tape measure, divide the distance between the two marks on the tape into quarters and make marks for each throttle opening on the tape. (0, 1/4, 1/2, 3/4, W.O.T.)
- F. Ride the motorcycle and make mental notes regarding the carburetion according to the throttle index. If a problem is truly carburetor related, the symptoms will come and go according to the throttle position.

3. Work in progression from 0 throttle through full throttle. Motorcycle carburetor fuel circuits are additive. This means the main circuit delivery is an addition to the pilot circuit delivery. The pilot system delivers fuel at all throttle settings, therefore, the tuning of the pilot circuit will have some influence on the decisions to be made regarding the main circuit. If there is any question about the jetting of the pilot circuit it should be addressed first. After the pilot circuit has been optimized it is then possible to accurately evaluate the main circuit and it's related components.

4. Altitude and Temperature

The purpose of the carburetor is to mix air and fuel in a specific ratio, by mass, in order to present a combustible mixture to the engine. Carburetors are generally flexible instruments when used to mix air and fuel in the proper ratio and will compensate for small changes in air density. It is when the altitude or temperature becomes extreme that it will be necessary to re-jet according to atmospheric conditions.

Altitude and temperature are important factors to consider when tuning carburetors for peak performance, as they directly affect air density. Notes should be taken regarding altitude and temperature changes as they occur in order to determine which way to go with carburetor adjustments.

Because air is a gas, its density is directly affected by altitude, barometric pressure, temperature and humidity. These factors will increase or decrease air density depending upon where you travel or how weather patterns develop in your riding area.

Gasoline is a liquid and cannot be compressed. Therefore, its density is not affected by altitude, temperature, or humidity.
