

Modern Imperialism

The late nineteenth century was marked by a period of "imperialism" in which European states began to divide up the world among themselves.

European nations began to acquire colonies in Africa, Asia, and the Pacific, and to establish spheres of influence in the Americas.

The process of imperialism was driven by a number of factors, including the desire for raw materials, the need for new markets, and the desire for national prestige.

Imperialism was also driven by a sense of racial superiority and a belief in the civilizing mission, which held that Europeans had a duty to bring civilization and Christianity to the "uncivilized" peoples of the world.

Causes of Imperialism

Imperialism was driven by a number of factors, including the desire for raw materials, the need for new markets, and the desire for national prestige.

Desire for Raw Materials

- The industrial revolution had created a demand for raw materials that could not be met by domestic sources.
- Colonies provided a source of raw materials for the industrial revolution.
