

Chapter 27 - The Islamic Empires

- By the sixteenth century
- Turkish warriors had transformed the major Islamic areas of the world into vast regional empires
- Three empires divided up the greater part of the Islamic world : the Ottoman empire
 - which was distinguished by its multiethnic character ; the Safavid empire of Persia
 - which served as the center of Shiite Islam
 - and the Mughal empire which had been imposed over a predominantly Hindu Indian subcontinent
 - The creation of these durable and powerful political entities brought to an end a century and a half Muslim political disunity .
- The Islamic empires began as small warrior principalities in frontier areas .
- They expanded at varying rates and with varying degrees of success at the expense of neighboring states
- as they grew, they devised elaborate administrative and military institutions
- Under the guidance of talented and energetic rulers each empire organized an effective governmental apparatus
 - presided over a prosperous society
