

HYDRAULIC PRESSURE TEST

There are pressure test ports at the accumulator, front servo and rear servo. Also governor and overdrive clutch pressure can be checked with gauges.

Line pressure is checked at the accumulator test port, but must be in the drive position, as it is rear clutch oil that is being measured. Front clutch oil (3rd&Rev) is available at the front servo pressure port. All pressure port locations are seen in Figure 5.

Use the chart in Figure 6 to determine correct oil pressures. Use a 100 PSI gauge for testing line pressure and governor pressure. A 300 PSI gauge will be required for testing reverse.

Compare results of pressure tests with the analysis chart in Figure 7.

GOVERNOR PRESSURE TEST

This test checks governor operation by measuring governor pressure response to changes in vehicle speed. This test should be performed on a hoist that will allow the rear wheels to rotate freely.

1. Connect 100 PSI gauge to the governor pressure port (See Figure 5).
2. Start engine and place selector lever in the Drive position. At idle with the vehicle stopped, pressure should be 0 to 1-1/2 PSI maximum. If pressure does exceed this figure, a fault exists in the governor pressure control system.
3. Slowly increase engine speed, observe speedometer and pressure gauge. The governor pressure should increase in proportion to vehicle speed, or approximately 1 PSI for every 1 MPH.
4. Pressure should drop back to 0 to 1-1/2 PSI when wheels stop rotating.

5. Compare results of pressure test with the analysis chart in Figure 7.
