See note on page 33

OIL PUMP

The oil pump on the 5-cylinder, 4-cylinder and 3-cylinder engines is driven off the crankshaft and produces oil at a constant rate. In the 5-cylinder the oil pump is mounted on the rear end plate.

An adjustable bypass valve maintains positive oil pressure both at low and high engine speeds.

Refer to pages 3 and 6 for complete oil pressure figures.

CAUTION: If the oil pressure is excessive or falls below these limits, stop the engine (20-400000000) and make the cause of the trouble known to prevent damage before the oil is changed.

These pressures are available based on maximum specifications.

A heavier type oil filter is normally provided to remove dirt and foreign elements from the oil. The percentage of dirt in petrol changes the rate of burning the operating period. The removal of dirt and foreign particles causes extra strain on the oil and heavier maintenance when the filter is replaced every 100 hours.

OIL CHANGE FREQUENCY

Engines oil does not "break up". However, the lubricating oil is contaminated with the by-products of combustion: dirt, water, condensed fuel vapors, etc. and the changing of the oil is necessary. The frequency of changing the oil is dependent on the conditions.

The schedule for changing oil is directly in relation upon the operational circumstances; an extremely clean condition could go 100 hours with a dirty operation (fouling or excess exhaust) could be 50 hours or less.

RUNNING-IN NEW OR RECONDITIONED ENGINES

No special oil is required — use the oil recommended for the ambient temperature. Also read on page 12.7

DO NOT RUN CRANKCASE WITH NO OIL

Some operators mistakenly get confused in the confusion when starting the engine oil, how long the engine will run the engine — in the belief that not doing a better job of maintenance cleaning.

To bring this, however is contained through the oil pump. The main oil filter and the bypass valve keep the engine running — during starting period the protection of the oil. In addition, some of the lubricant will be trapped and return to the oil, the new oil, entering the lubricating system.

Do not get confused with the engine. The best method is to stop the oil when the engine is low enough to be able to see the oil level of the oil.

AIR CLEANER

All engines, when operating, require around 1000 cubic feet of air per hour. Some dirty air is full of abrasive matter, the engine will wear away excessively if the air cleaner does not remove the dirt before entering the cylinders.

Two basic types of air cleaners are normally used — the oil bath type and the dry, maintenance-free type.

Operating conditions determine the air cleaner service periods. In extremely dirty operations, this may be once or twice daily. In dirt protected areas, the air cleaner should be serviced when changing oil.

As the dirt is removed from the air flowing through the cleaner, it becomes the oil in the tank and moves the level. If the level is too high, application of the oil to the engine is affected and extra oil is carried into the air stream, through the carburetor and into the engine cylinders. This most serious condition is a serious maintenance problem.

By actual measurement, the amount of dirt shown below, when subjected to the volume shown every hour, will completely clog an engine in an eight hour day.

Figure 22

These servicing means Cleaning Thoroughly and Replacing with New Engine Oil, and Maintaining Air-Fight Components (ensure the air cleaner and intake manifold so that all air entering the engine is filtered).
