The heart is the muscular pump of the blood vascular system—it is the only one in the system. It has four chambers: two on the right relate to the lungs (pulmonary circulation) and two on the left are concerned with the rest of the body (systemic circulation). Deoxygenated blood from the body enters the right atrium and is pumped to the lungs by the right ventricle under relatively low pressure. Oxygenated blood returns to the left atrium and is pumped to the body tissues by the left ventricle under rather high pressure, a fact reflected in the thicker left ventricular walls. The bi-/tricuspid valves prevent regurgitation of blood back into the atria; the semilunar valves prevent reflux of blood back into the ventricles. The endocardium is a continuation of the endothelium which lines all blood vessels: simple squamous epithelium. The myocardium is cardiac muscle.
