

Meiosis I

Prophase I. Condensed chromosomes condense. Homologous chromosomes pair up and disengage sister chromatids of homologous exchange parts. The nuclear envelope disintegrates, and spindle microtubules form.

Metaphase I. Homologous chromosomes line up along the equator of the cell. One homologous of each pair takes each pole of the cell and attached to spindle microtubules via its kinetochores.

Anaphase I. Homologous separate, one member of each pair going to each pole of the cell. Sister chromatids do not separate.

The details of meiotic cell division
In meiotic cell division (meiosis and cytokinesis), the homologous chromosomes of a diploid cell are separated, producing four haploid daughter cells. Each daughter cell contains one member of each pair of parental homologous chromosomes. In these diagrams, two pairs of homologous chromosomes are shown, large and small. The red chromosomes are from one parent (for example, the father), and the blue chromosomes are from the other parent.

Meiosis II

Prophase II. 2 chromosomes have relaxed after telophase I. They recondense. Spindle microtubules re-form and attach to the outer kinetochores.

Metaphase II. Chromosomes line up along the equator, with outer kinetochores of each chromosome attached to spindle microtubules that lead to opposite poles.

Anaphase II. Chromatids separate into independent daughter chromosomes, one former chromatid moving toward each pole.

Telophase II. Chromosomes finish moving to opposite poles. Nuclear envelopes re-form, and the chromosomes become extended again. Cytokinesis (not shown here) results in four haploid cells, each containing one member of each pair of homologous chromosomes.
